GDPR and Data Protection – Practical Issues and Best Practice

Course No 226

GDPR has empowered data subjects by providing them with specific rights over their personal data and individuals have a right to obtain the information that an organisation holds on them. Organisations have a one-month window within which to respond and many fail to understand how to deal with such requests in an effective and compliant manner. Another main talking point of GDPR is its new data breach notification requirements. Whilst the act of failing to notify a breach when required to do so can result in significant consequences, many organisations still tend to only look into their incident response practices if and when a breach occurs. There are numerous incidents such as cc'ing the wrong person on an email or theft of an employee's laptop out of his vehicle and these types of incidents are certainly important. Assessing the severity and quantifying the level of risk for each incident against the complex breach notification regulations can be rather challenging for organisations. This course is intended to provide some practical insights into how to meet the personal data requests and help your organisation overcome the challenges involved, as well as provide a breakdown of the actions required for a streamlined and consistent incident response management plan.
